What exactly is an analytics translator?

An analytics translator serves as a liaison between the analytical/technical team and the executive team ensuring that the designed solution meets the delivered solution. The analytics translator ensures that the business intelligence tool will be adopted and shared across the complete organization. Why do you need an analytics translator?

Organizations have been increasingly turning to advanced analytics and artificial intelligence to improve decision making across business processes.

In this process they face issue like:

- ✓ Unnecessary or inappropriate data analysis requests;
- ✓ Projects or analytical requirements that fall somewhere between the skills of a business user and the skills of a trained data scientist;
- ✓ Poorly understood or poorly translated data analysis that sends a business user off in the wrong direction.

Organizations recognizing that success with artificial intelligence and analytics requires not just data scientists but also entire cross-functional, agile teams that include data engineers, data architects, data-visualization experts, and—perhaps most important— analytics translators.

What do we offer

Our analytics translators tap into their working knowledge of artificial intelligence and analytics to convey business goals to the data professionals who will create the models and solutions. We ensure that the solution produces insights that the business can interpret and execute on, and, ultimately, communicates the benefits of these insights to business users to drive adoption. Because of the extensive experience of our translators in different industries and companies we can effectively identify the value of artificial intelligence and analytics in the correct business context for your organization

We have the know-how and skills to use the right tools for the right purpose.
